

Lines to "Julia"

Dear friend, full many a time may I
The looks of flattery Upon those new unsoiled sheets,
And sing in praise of them.

Yes, they may say, their eyes are bright
As stars that form the sky,
And that they form so full of grace
Can with a fairy's vie.

May call thy cheek a blushing rose With Lily's white combined, Thy voice as sweet as any bird's That floats upon the wind.

Now even if I have to take all the responsibility & suffer all the misery I shall go on. There is no other course & take heed if they are foolish enough to give any notice & protect themselves
I shall count on your kind words in my absence—
As soon as I have made my money arrangements I shall not care for any such notice on their part They are willing to accept the benefit—but none
